Wilderness is our common ground.

As teachers, we strive to expand our students' worlds. But we know that helping them grow and develop doesn't happen only inside a school building. We have seen how kids blossom in our wide, wild open places. We are so fortunate to have amazing landscapes like the Organ Mountains and the Robledos practically out our back doors. These natural treasures add so much to student's lives. These places are outdoor classrooms where children can challenge themselves and reconnect with the real world—away from TVs, computers and video games. We need to keep the things we love about Doña Ana County just the way they are.
